Cox

Cox said his favorite player to watch from the sideline (and on the field) was Gayle Sayers, the former Chicago Bears great.

"He also provided me with my most embarrassing moment. He had a kickoff return where I was playing safety on the play after I kicked it. He came through a hole that I saw … I thought that he might run there, and I had him face to face. I never even touched his jersey. He made some sort of move on me and then he was gone."

He said he also loved watching Barry Sanders, because he played the game with respect. The Detroit Lion running back was famous for never really celebrating the many touchdowns he scored. He simply handed

As for his former teammates, Cox can list some of the greatest to ever don a Viking jersey. He came up with Fran Tarkenton, and was there when No. 10 returned to Minnesota. He watched the "Purple People Eaters" from the sidelines, and said "They were better than they were because of the linebackers they had behind them. Those guys were just as good."

Some are not so well. Carl Eller is haunted by his demons of substance abuse and pain from his playing days.

Wally Hilgenberg, one of those linebackers, is battling ALS, or "Lou Gehrig's Disease."

But some have done incredible things, including Minnesota Supreme Court Justice Alan Page.

"Alan was just a freak," Cox said. "He didn't need to play football, obviously. But he was so big, that he
